

Churches Conservation Trust - Wiltshire Wards

The Churches Conservation Trust was established by the 1968 Pastoral Measure: Ecclesiastical, Church of England law which is also approved by Parliament, and they celebrated their 40th birthday in 2009.

For over 40 years, they have played a unique role in national life. Without us, over 340 irreplaceable historic buildings might have disappeared entirely. Instead many have once again become the focus of active community life.

The organisation started life as the Redundant Churches Fund, a unique partnership between Church, State and the Charity sector, which came about because of the tireless campaigning of passionate church enthusiasts in the 1960s.

Most notable amongst these was Ivor Bulmer-Thomas who not only founded the Trust but also set up its sister charity 'Friends of Friendless Churches', which to this day continues to save churches outside the remit of CCT such as those in Wales.

The 1960s were difficult days for historic churches. Many were falling into disrepair and some were threatened with demolition at a time when historic buildings were sometimes seen as an impediment to progress.

No mechanism or organisation existed for caring for churches where parishes felt they could no longer afford to keep going. If it hadn't been for the commitment of local communities and national campaigners such as Ivor, many of the historic churches we know and love today might have been lost.

The first church saved by CCT was St Peter's, Edlington in the coalfields of South Yorkshire. The church had had its roof and windows removed in an attempt to turn it into a ruin. It was a Grade I Medieval church in a disadvantaged area with few other historic or community buildings. It is now a highly valued community and arts building, regularly used by local schools and colleges.

For more information about the Churches Trust and what they do please visit their website.

Currently there are 21 Churches in the county of Wiltshire that are in the care of the Church Trust.

The information in this document is mainly sourced for the website of the Churches Conservation Trust above.

Everleigh - St. Peter

St. Peter's was built in 1813 by John Morlidge of London for the Astley Family. It is built in the Gothic Style and was one of the first churches to have been built using an iron frame. The chancel is short and the nave narrow. The height of the building is emphasised by the elegant west gallery and the hammerbeam roof. The church retains many of its original features and includes several monuments to the Ashley Family these include a large tablet to Francis Dugdale Ashley, founder of the church and who died in 1818. There is also a ring of six bells housed in the square embattled tower.

St. Peter's Church has been designated as a Grade II* listed building. It was declared redundant on 18 April, 1974 and was vested in the Trust on 22 October, 1975.