Salisbury, or New Sarum

A LARGE and ancient city of Wiltshire, seated on the Avon, 82 Miles from London, and within one mile of Old Sarum of notoriety, the site of which is very perceptible owing to its being a remarkable eminence. It is formed into regular streets, through each of which runs a stream which tends greatly to the comfort and convenience of its inhabitants; owing to these canals and the natural dampness of the town, there are no cellars, indeed it is so uncommonly damp that bodies have been interred two feet in water. It boasts a commodious market-place, and excellent market on Tuesday, an minor one on Saturday, and one every Tuesday fortnight for cattle. The manufacture of flannels, serges, linseys and cutlery, which once infinitely tended to benefit the town, are now reduced to a mere nothing. The cathedral being the chief ornament, claims over first notice; it is an elegant, chaste and venerable pile, with a spire rising in the centre, erected in the year 1258, and dedicated to the Virgin Mary; the different styles of architecture which distinguish the spire, together with the higher part of the tower, from the rest of the structure, has often induced critical judges of Gothic architecture to suspect that the spire was added to the tower at a period much posterior to the original building, but no probable conjecture has yet been offered to determine its proper age; the architecture of the present tower and its spire is quite in that style of building which began to be in fashion about the beginning of the fifteenth century; the quantity of timber in the several roofs, according to moderate computation laid before the lords of the treasury in the year 1737, amounts to 2641 tons of oak. The figures, which were at one time part of its chief external ornaments, are now entirely dilapidated; yet it is probably one of the most exquisite, regular built sanctuaries in the kingdom, and contains as many windows as there are days in the year; there are three other churches and several places of worship for dissenters. The council house situate in the south-east corner of the market-place was begun in 1788, and was completed in 1795, it was erected at the expense of the present Earl of Radnor, recorder of the city, who made this munificent present to the corporation; it is a square building, with a grand doric portico at the entrance to the two courts of law on the west side, and a large bay window projecting from the great room to the east. The principal entrance is on the north side by a flight of steps leading to the door through a noble façade, consisting of four columns of the Doric order, and crowned by its proper entablature, and a balustrade; the whole is surrounded by a rich cornice of the above-mentioned order, and the angles of each front are ornamented with very handsome rustic work in stone: it consists of only one floor, which are two courts, a council room, a grand jury room, apartments for the several offices of the corporation, a waiting room and a vestibule. In the courts, which occupy the whole of the left wing, are holden assizes, and the sessions of the peace for the city, county and close; one of them, which is the bishop's guild-hall, is distinguished by a mitre, cut in stone, over the great door, and is the place in which the lord bishop holds his courts leet and baron, and his court of record of pleas; each of them measures 36 feet, by 24, and 30 feet in height, and is provided with a commodious gallery for the audience. The Poultry Cross, as it is called, (to distinguish it from two other crosses which formerly stood in the city) is situated just without the south-west corner of the market-place, and deserves notice on account of the purpose for which it was erected. In Fox's Book of Martyrs, we are informed that "Among the friends of Wykliffe was an Earl of Salisbury, who, for contempt noted in him towards the sacrament, in carrying it home to his house, was enjoined by Ralph Ergham, Bishop of the same place, to make in Salisbury a cross of stone, in which all the story of the matter should be written, and he every Friday during his life to come to the cross barefooted and bareheaded, in his shirt, and there upon his knees to do penance for his act. The name of the Earl is supposed to be John de Montacute; its form is hexagonal, and over each arch remains a niche for a statue, it is reduced to half its height by the demolition of the upper part, which might have taken place at the time of the reformation, an age hateful to images and crosses; by the style of part of it we may fairly judge that it was a handsome piece of Gothic architecture. There are several charity schools in this city, and other charitable institutions. Its municipal government is vested in a mayor, recorder, deputy-recorder, 24 aldermen, 10 of whom besides the mayor, recorder and deputy-recorder, and mayor for the year preceding, are justices of the peace, thirty commons council and a town clerk. The Earl of Pembroke is Lord High Steward for the city. It holds the following fairs: first Tuesday after 6th January, for cattle and woolen cloth. Monday before old lady day for woolen cloth. Whitsun Monday and Tuesday, for horses and pedlary; and Tuesday after Weyhill-fair for hops, cheese, &c. &c. It returns two members to parliament, and according to the last census, contains as follows – city and close, 8580, an increase of 337 only, within the last 10 years. Fisherton-anger, a place adjoining Salisbury, contains 1253, therefore the whole amount to 9833.
