Phineas Dawes, et Thomas Dawes.

The deeds of this property show that soon after the Company had acquired the freehold they erected a new building in the garden at the back of Crew's house. The lower part of this building (now used as stores and stables) is described in the deeds as the buttery, above which was the large room or hall, the approach to this room being by a wide staircase from the Court yard in Hog Lane. The feoffees in Trust of the lands and tenements of the Company at this time were Richard Mason, Thomas Staples, and Joseph Mitchell.
