

Burglaries

Last Thursday fortnight the house of Miss Eyre of Stratford Sub Castle was attempted to be broken into by some villains, who were fortunately discovered before they had accomplished their design.

On the Saturday night following the house was again infested, and on Monday night last an attempt was made at the house of Mrs. Rossiter, a widow lady of that place, but the family being on their guard, the thieves were again disappointed. It is imagined that these repeated efforts have been made by a tribe of medivants who have lately infested that village, as one of them has been known to make particular enquiries respecting those houses.

Salisbury and Winchester Journal, 5 March 1787