The 5th Battalion Wiltshire Regiment sailed for Gallipoli on 1st July 1915, landed at Cape Helles on 17th and then moved to Anzac Cove. They suffered heavy casualties in the Turkish attack on 10 August.

Extract from the Battalion War Diary, 10th August 1915, 5th Battalion Wiltshire Regiment, Gallipoli, Anzac "1 am. Battalion moves away in single file less D Company and part of B Company. Arrived two hours before sunrise and the men were told to dig into dugouts and make themselves comfortable as the position was quite safe. Men therefore removed equipment and rifles. As soon as it was light, machine guns opened on the men lying in their dugouts. About ¼ of an hour later there was a rush of Turks from both sides of the depression which drove the men, unarmed and unequipped down the gully (Salzli Beit). Bottom of the gully commanded by machine guns and so escape was cut off.

Three courses possible: To rush past the machine guns down the Sazli Beit, this was tried but in nearly all cases proved fatal. To climb the northern slope of the ravine under fire and try to escape over the top. This was done in a few cases with success. To hide in gully till night, this also was done with more success. (A party of 5 men rescued from the gully having been there 16 days). They reported numbers of men wounded, unable to get away and died of exhaustion and starvation. Parties arrived on the Beach in fours, fives, and some carried bodies during the 11th, 12th and 13th unarmed, unequipped and demoralised. Battalion mustered on the beach, roughly 420 men. After they marched off. Position was attacked at dawn on Tuesday (10th) morning and through the retirement of the regiments on right and left, D company are left 'in the air'. Major Hern and Lieutenant J. E. R Firmin killed; remainder hold on until surrounded and forced to retire into gully. Here reorganised and sent up to a counter attack - unsuccessfully and with large loss. Several wanton attacks attempted with handfuls of men."
