

Sudden Death Of Harriet Sainsbury

Last evening at Littleton, Harriet, the wife of a labourer named George Sainsbury, ate her supper about 8 O'clock, and soon afterwards, feeling very drowsy, went to bed with her two young children. Within half an hour the husband who was below heard the infant crying, and on going up stairs to ascertain the cause he found the poor woman quite dead.

Devizes and Wiltshire Gazette, October 1 1846